

RISE Capital Investment Group in Russia

is a leading investor in complex infrastructure projects focused on public-private partnership arrangements that are of strategic importance for the regions of the Russian Federation.

RISE Capital is a specialist private equity business with its headquarters in Stockholm (Sweden). RISE Capital opened its Russian office in Moscow in 2013. The Group consists of Swedish and foreign subsidiaries which own Russian engineering companies.

RISE Capital's mission in Russia is to facilitate the successful deployment of capital for strategically important projects at the regional and federal level using international best practices in PPP.

The Group's portfolio currently contains large-scale amenity and transport infrastructure construction projects in several regions of the Russian Federation, implemented via public-private partnership agreements. The total investment in projects in Russia exceeds RUB 140 billion. Agreements have been signed with the Yamalo-Nenets Autonomous Okrug, and the Murmansk, Tomsk, and Lipetsk regions on strategic PPP development partnerships. Numerous other agreements are being drawn up with major Russian regions.

RISE Capital deploys its own capital, and works with European and Asian institutional investors to raise funds. Professionals working in the Group provide consultation services for federal and regional authorities on the preparation and structuring of major projects. RISE Capital's partners include Russian credit and financial institutions, construction companies, and federal agencies.

In June 2015, the leading international investment company Nekton acquired a stake in RISE Capital. This significantly expanded the investment capabilities of the Group in respect of Russian projects, and Nekton has enabled RISE Capital to increase its presence in Russia. Gerard Lopez, the head of the company and a well-known businessman, joined the Group's management and took the position of Chairman of the Board at RISE Capital.
